■● Prior to starting my clinical placement, I honestly had no idea what sort of challenges I would have to face in a Community Pharmacy setting. It has essentially provided me with a perspective of the expectations of a pharmacist as a health care professional. ■ I personally saw it as a journey which exposed my strengths and weaknesses. ■ I saw my preceptor as someone who guided me to help address my weaknesses. ■ However, I began to realise that this was only to a certain extent. ■ The most important thing I learned from these experiences is that *I can only develop my skills if I actively contribute to the pharmacy by demonstrating initiative. ► This initiative was a product of my inner passion and motivation to practise as a pharmacist in future. ● Various encounters along my journey proved to me that every day presents with a new challenge. ●► I initially could not comprehend just how diverse the members of the community were, particularly in regards to their health issues and understanding of their condition. ■● I found that my clinical placement allowed me to see things from a perspective that I would never have imagined. ■● In order to illustrate these notions, I have decided to reflect upon two major ideas.

[Best to remind yourself to learn, and to learn something new everyday, even if its just by reading a novel. You don't know where you're gonna be, and you can't possibly know what you'll be working on, so you might as well do something you enjoy.

You will be more creative and happy. Good luck! ----- Nicholas_L Get my book which is more aimed at first year undergraduates who want to combine learning and see how they can study with industry. \--- davidy123 I was in an interview a couple of days ago and they asked me a series of 'hobbies' questions. I'm not a particularly good interviewer so I was embarrassed by the question, even though I'd come up with a number of reasonable responses. My fear, though, was that if I had a good answer they would look at my CV and discover a gap between my professional experience and my hobby experience. How can you help your interviewer avoid this? It's not an easy question to answer. petervandijck Spend time with the customer.

After all, the way you will work will be decided by them. Make sure that you show that you really care for your future customers. Ijk i don't know about UK, but in US, if you don't have a work visa or can't find any company in US, you can go back to your home country, so i don't think you're in a 'dangerous' situation... johne20 here are some useful links: Develop...](
